Principal's message

Pivoting

Sometimes you just stop in your tracks and have a real moment... a reflective pause... sometimes a profound ponder.

On Monday morning, a small team of us met with Year 12 to let them know that Rainbow Day organisation would need to change. The Prime Minister had declared Thursday 22 September a day of mourning following the passing of Her Majesty, Queen Elizabeth II, the previous Thursday.

There was not a word of complaint from any of our Year 12s. Not one word. They understood the reasons why they would need to change plans that had been made for their final week. They understood the reasons why the roadside collection points would no longer operate. They appreciated the need to treat the Thursday as the day of respect it is intended to be and work around it.

It would be fair to say that their collective response – their acceptance without undue disappointment, their preparedness to pivot in the moment, their resilience – gave me cause to pause and reflect on this simple idea; what a great bunch of humans we are about to unleash on the world.

Big Yellow Taxi moments

Don't it always seem to go / That you don't know what you've got 'til it's gone?

Wise words from that American song-bird philosopher, Joni Mitchell.

You may have heard of the Gallup organisation.

Gallup is that huge organisation that provides analytics, management consultancy, and the Gallup Poll; an assessment of public opinion based on targeted questioning directed at large, representative groups as a basis for predicting the outcomes of future elections. The activities of the Gallup organisation in this last area of public activity have become so established in the vernacular that Gallup Poll has entered the dictionary as an inclusive term for any measure of public opinion.

Education

What you may not know is that this US-based company also offers educational consultancy.

Recently, Gallup published data that revealed that US teachers are experiencing the highest rates of burnout when compared with other full-time workers in all other industries.

US figures supplied by Gallup demonstrate that K-12 and university education workers top the list of the most burnt-out employees at 44% and 35%, respectively.

There are no other industries that come close.

In US school settings, this translates to more than four out of every ten teachers claiming they are either “always” or “very often” burnt out as a result of the work they do.

The Gallup report into the burnout rates among US educators stated this:

... rates among K-12 workers exceed those for healthcare and law enforcement workers, whose burnout rates have been featured prominently on newscasts since the (COVID) pandemic began...

The Gallup research pointed to five root causes of worker burnout: unfair treatment at work, unmanageable workload, lack of role clarity, lack of communication and support from managers, and unreasonable expectations.

Spoiler alert! If you are thinking, “Thank goodness this is a US report” you may want to brace yourself.

Nobody living west of Gladesville should be surprised to discover that New South Wales is dealing with a teacher shortage that is growing. Student enrolments continue to expand nationally at what observers have called “a record rate.” Conversely, the most recent figures for teaching graduates indicate that teacher demand will outstrip teacher supply by more than 4,000 places over the next three years. And like the tip of the iceberg, the problem goes much deeper than the issue of burgeoning shortages.

The most recent reports into the health and wellbeing of Australia’s teachers reveals pretty much what the American Gallup Poll has laid bare about US teachers. Many of those who have continued in their roles as teachers and teaching leaders are dealing with increasing mental, physical, and emotional exhaustion because schools are understaffed.

The fact that these shortages have become the new normal has led to almost half of the country’s teachers considering leaving the job. Figures for Australian teachers demonstrate that burnt-out teachers are 63% more likely to take sick leave. Sick leave is at an all-time high. A colleague called this week, concerned that his school’s teacher attendance is down to just 60%. He wanted to know whether his experience was anomalous or part of some larger trend. Mudgee High is nowhere near that low, but to put it simply, teacher attendance is being impacted by teacher attendance. Getting smashed with extra duties and extra classes – plugging the gaps – comes at a cost.

The Anglophonic world is short of teachers, full-stop. Retaining teaching staff in this current shortage is as crucial as attracting new ones. Treating those we have with the respect they well deserve, those who turn up regularly and do their best to prepare the next generation of Australians for the world, is easily the best course of action anyone outside the profession can take. Most of the people with whom teachers work – parents, carers and the wider community – do just that.

Most.

Until next week...

Wayne Eade
Principal

Link news

This week's focus business is Complete Weld. A family owned and operated Mudgee business. Mudgee locals Loretta, Robert and their son Tudor purchased Complete Weld Australia in November 2018 from the original owners; two brothers who built the business from their workshop on their family property near Mudgee to what it is today. Complete Weld Australia remains a family-owned and operated metal fabrication business.

Tudor completed his metal fabrication apprenticeship in 2008 at Complete Weld Australia with the original owners. During his apprenticeship, attention to detail and a high standard of workmanship were valued and that is the standard Tudor is committed to producing today. He continued to work with them for another 10 years, eventually taking the opportunity to purchase Complete Weld Australia in partnership with his parents.

Complete Weld took on Jacob Marshall through the Link program. Jacob has made the most of his Link opportunity and has tried various work experience placements. He began with Royston Petrie Seeds at their seed producing farm on the outskirts of Mudgee where he learned about revegetation and seed cultivation.

During Term 2, Jacob spent his time with Mudgee Regional Council in the Biosecurity weeds department working around Mudgee and other areas assisting and learning the importance of controlling weeds to protect the natural environment.

For Term 3, he is with Complete Weld alongside Billy Breadsell, who gained an apprenticeship after his Link 2021 experience. Jacob is assisting in the workshop, learning the processes that go into making tray bodies and accessories to suit each individual order.

Thank you to Complete Weld for their continuing support of the Link Program.

Jacob Marshall

Space Teams Mission Oz

For more than a half-century, Space Exploration has been an inspirational force in our society toward the development and application of science and engineering. Space Teams: Mission Oz gives students an incredible opportunity to participate virtually in space exploration.

Are you a student aged 12 and over from Mudgee and surrounds? We are looking for 8 young astronauts who would like to participate in Space Teams: Mission Oz. It is from 2nd October to 7th October. The students will form 2 teams and compete against teams around the world.

As part of this mission, teams will design spacecraft, navigate to another planet, land their vehicle, build a planetary habitat, and explore a new planet to find resources to sustain human life. Students will have lessons from subject matter experts including astronauts, scientists and engineers who are directly involved in ongoing missions as they compete with other teams for the best mission design. These topics range from planetary science to spacecraft systems, orbital mechanics to robotic exploration.
